

Nobody's Born With a Broken Heart

Grace Potter

Nobody is born with a broken heart.
Nobody is born with a broken heart.
Once there was a restless father who walked out on his one and only son.
And now he's saving up to buy a guitar so he can write his own redemption song.
And lonely is the wayward mother, she says, "I swear I'm gonna get it right one of these days."
But once you let somebody break you down, you just get used to feeling that way.
But I say nobody is born with a broken heart.
Nobody is born with a broken heart.
There's a young man living under the freeway.
He sleeps in any warm place he can find.
And he's still lookin' for the strangers
who gave him green eyes and a restless mind.
He spends his days on Beggar's Corner
as the people toss their coins and move along.
One day a strange man with a guitar sat beside him,
closed his green eyes and played the boy a song.
Nobody is born with a broken heart.
Nobody is born with a broken heart.
(Guitar playing)
I've met so many people change a circumstance,
and then I'd ask Him for a miracle,
all they want is a second chance.
Sing Hallelujah,
sing any song you wanna hear.
Sing a song of redemption,
sing away, sing away!
Sing, nobody is born with a broken heart.
Nobody is born with a broken heart.
