Laura Laurent

Bright Eyes

Laura are you still living there on your estate of sorrow? you used to leave it occasionally but now you don't even bother to ride the commuter train west to Chicago, to stroll through the greenery in the park past the statueshow their eyes seemed to follow you like a hated addiction their beauty carved out of absolutes you could never claim or even envision Laura you were the saddest song in the shape of a woman yeah I thought you were beautiful but I wept with your movements but I hope that you're laughing now from that place on the carpet where we shared a sleeping bag in your sister's apartmentoh how she would worry so you know I was just a stranger but she asked me to care for you yes she did and I went and betrayed herbut do you know we're in high demand Laura, us, people who suffer because we don't take to arguing and we're quick to surrender well I think I would call tonight if I still had your number your thoughts have always laid close to mine we were both skipping supper but you should never be embarrassed by your trouble with living cause it's the ones with the sorest throats, Laura,

Lyrics provided by http://www.1songlyrics.com/

who have done the most singingLa la la...