

A Daily Anthem

David Cook

Break your neck for some substance
This is temporary sanity, an exercise in vanity
So long, to the ordinary day
Wrought with fictitious tales or that there's any other way
Hold on to anything at all
It's a long way down between the summer and the fall
If I told you that you're everything
Would you sing along
Would you sing along
It's a daily anthem
Would you sing my song at the top of your lungs
And we'll all sing along
We'll all sing along
It's a half day blessing
For the lessons I've learned
Never deserved
And we'll all sing along
We'll all sing along
Now the verses take hold
A gentle under current are more years to grow old
Say goodbye to the cold and try to begin everything (there's life)
As we sing your daily anthem
Would you sing my song at the top of your lungs
And we'll all sing along
We'll all sing along
It's a half day blessing
For the lessons I've learned
Never deserved
And we'll all sing along
We'll all sing along
