Whisper

The Dear Hunter

There's shadows on the walls Of moments far too troubling to recall All the settings and the scenes That signal suffering Impassioned pleas that ended in a whisperIn all the lessons learned, Were they worth the ash from all the bridges burned? Standing, stomping in the damage and The ruins of a slip of tongue With tragic consequencesI think that we've all made our gravest mistakes On the greatest intentions that we're too stubborn to let go With this little time before I go, I'll open up my mouth, And scream it out To cast my voice Into the crowdNow that you're alone, Is it really so impossible to know All the actions and reactions Pinned against each other Never really end just how you want itI think that we've all made our gravest mistakes On the greatest intentions that we're too stubborn to let goWith this little time before I go, I'll open up my mouth, And scream it out To cast my voice Into the crowd I know that all of this will come and go So open up your mouth And scream it out To cast your voice To the crowd.So open up your mouth And scream it out To cast your voice To the crowd.(Don't let the world bring you down)
